Rather than evoking ideals directly, much of later Romantic art depicts ideals of love, art and of the artist indirectly, by focusing in the first instance on psychological problems in achieving creativity and love, or on the effect of social decline on the artist, or on satirical portraits of failed artists wrongly held in high esteem by society. In this event, there may be a slight delay in shipping and possible variation in description. He was then an assistant professor, not yet the celebrated, great man, but I must say it was an absolutely overwhelming experience to have been in Lionel Trilling's class on romantic poetry in which I distinguished myself mostly by being silent and overawed. I have woven this shawl with my own hands, for you to wear. There's no rhyme or reason to that plan. See details for additional description.
