Research has demonstrated the negative emotional valence of bitterness revival, boredom reduction and, to a lesser extent, intimacy maintenance. Such ignorance to think that To Watch Is Madness is by any means the complete and only truth. Drawing on observations and interviews with families, doctors, and policy actors, Timmermans and Buchbinder have given us the first ethnographic study of how parents and geneticists resolve the many uncertainties in screening newborns. But from this twin source, contemporary culture develops into two important directions.
